EU Update

Council of the EU
The Foreign Affairs Council (FAC) had an extraordinary meeting on 17 January to discuss the latest events in Mali. It also met on 31 January and 18 February.

On 31 January, it adopted conclusions on Mali, Somalia, closer co-operation and regional integration in the Maghreb, and EU support for sustainable change in transition societies. It also:
- examined the state of play on the Arab Spring and took stock of the EU’s response
- discussed recent events in Egypt and the latest developments in Syria
- amended Regulation 1210/2003 concerning specific restrictions on economic and financial relations with Iraq
- extended the validity of national permits for the entry and stay of certain Palestinians in the EU for a further 12 months
- amended the restrictive measures in view of the situation in Afghanistan so as to take account of decisions taken by the United Nations (UN)
- approved the six-monthly report on the implementation of the EU strategy against the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, covering the second semester of 2012
- extended sanctions against persons responsible for the misappropriation of Tunisian state funds by 12 months
- approved the EU crisis management exercise programme for 2013-2015
- approved the crisis management concept for a possible civilian Common Security and Development Policy (CSDP) border security mission in Libya (see Page 2)
- eased the EU’s restrictive measures against Zimbabwe
- strengthened the EU’s restrictive measures against the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK).

On 18 February it adopted conclusions on Mali, the Eastern Partnership, Syria, Zimbabwe, the DPRK, the EU’s priorities at UN human rights forums, and the European Court of Auditors Special Report No. 18/2012 on ‘European Union Assistance to Kosovo related to the rule of law’. It also:
- discussed the situation in Iraq and how the EU can contribute to promoting stability in the country
- took stock of developments in the Middle East Peace Process and discussed in particular how the EU can contribute to the resumption on direct negotiations between the parties in the Middle East
- eased the EU’s restrictive measures against Zimbabwe
- strengthened the EU’s restrictive measures against the DPRK

The General Affairs Council (GAC) met on 4 February. It:
- had an exchange of views on the Irish presidency’s work programme for the duration of its term (January-July 2013)
- examined draft conclusions for the European Council meeting to be held on 7-8 February
- examined a draft annotated agenda for the European Council meeting to be held on 14-15 March (including external relations and relations with strategic partners)
- decided not to object to the adoption by the European Commission (EC) of a regulation removing Azerbaijan and Iran from the list of countries benefiting from the EU’s general system of tariff preferences (GSP)
- decided not to object to the adoption by the EC of a regulation establishing rules of procedure for granting, under the GSP, a special incentive arrangement for sustainable development and good governance (“GSP+”)

Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP)
On 17 January, the FAC established a CSDP mission to support the training and reorganisation of the Malian Armed Forces. It also appointed Brigadier General François Lecointre (France) as EU mission commander and estimated the common costs of the operation at € 12.3 million for the mandate of 15 months.

On 22 January, the Council of the EU extended the EU training mission in Somalia (EUTM Somalia) for two years. It also announced that Brigadier General Gerald Ahern (Ireland) will take over the command and that the common costs of the operations until 31 March 2015 are estimated at € 11.6 million.

On 31 January, the FAC approved the crisis management concept for a possible new civilian CSDP mission to support capacity building for border management in Libya.

On 18 February, the FAC launched the CSDP mission to support the training and reorganisation of the Malian Armed Forces (EUTM Mali). According to the press release, ‘EUTM Mali will provide advice and military training to the Malian Armed Forces, including on command and control, logistics and human resources as well as on international humanitarian law, the protection of civilians and human rights. The mission will not be involved in combat operations.’

European External Action Service (EEAS)
On 17 January, the High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy (HR), Catherine Ashton, announced that the EU would open a delegation to the Republic of the Union of Myanmar (Burma) and a delegation to the United Arab Emirates.

On 21 January, HR Ashton directed the EU Military Staff to activate the ‘Clearing House’ mechanism to support the African-led International Support Mission to Mali (AFISMA). According to the press release, ‘The aim of the EU “Clearing House” is to assist AFISMA in reaching the operational strength necessary for the immediate transportation of AFISMA contingents, but also in the longer term to provide logistical support to AFISMA’s engagement in Mali – including for the transportation of equipment, personnel and ammunition – in the coming months. It highlights the EU’s willingness to support AFISMA.’

On 5 February, HR Ashton announced the appointment of Vygaudas Usackas (Lithuania) as the new Head of Delegation (HoD) to the Russian Federation. Since 2010, Mr Usackas has been Head of the EU Delegation and EU Special Representative in Afghanistan.

European Commission (EC)
On 5 February, the EC published a proposal for a directive on the prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering and terrorist financing.

On 7 February, the EC and the EEAS published a joint communication on the EU cybersecurity strategy entitled ‘An Open, Safe and Secure Cyberspace’.

On 8 February, the EC published a report on Kosovo’s progress in fulfilling the requirements of the visa liberalisation roadmap.

On 14 February, the EC published a proposal for a directive on implementing enhanced cooperation in the area of financial transaction tax.

On 26 February, the EC published a communication on the simplification of EU funding entitled ‘Second Simplification Scoreboard for the MFF 2014-2020’.

On 27 February, the EC published a communication on the post-2015 development framework entitled ‘A Decent Life for All: Ending poverty and giving the world a sustainable future.

THE EU AND THE COMPREHENSIVE APPROACH

By Catherine Woollard – Executive Director, EPLO

(NB/ Unless otherwise stated, the views expressed are those of the author.)

Background

The European Commission and the European External Action Service are currently developing a communication on the EU’s comprehensive approach to external action.

In January 2013, EPLO organised a Civil Society Dialogue Network (CSDN) policy meeting on ‘The EU’s Comprehensive Approach to External Action: Gathering Civil Society Input’.

The following article is an abridged version of a background document which the EPLO office prepared in advance of that meeting.

1. What does the Comprehensive Approach mean for the EU?

The expression “Comprehensive Approach” is used by many people to mean many different things. In recent debates, two definitions have been used by EU policy-makers, one broad and one narrower.

The broad understanding

The broader understanding of the Comprehensive Approach for the EU is an integrated EU approach towards a third country or towards another region or group of countries. An integrated approach means that the EU has a set of objectives developed by and agreed to by all relevant EU institutions and it then has policies, “tools”, and activities to implement these objectives. Both the objectives and the activities may be contained in a strategy towards the country or region in question. The expression “a whole-of-EU approach” is also used to describe the broader understanding of the Comprehensive Approach; it draws on concepts of “whole-of-government” approaches and efforts to unify the United Nations (UN) (e.g. “one UN at country level” and lead agency policies).

The narrower understanding

There is also a narrower understanding of the Comprehensive Approach for the EU, which defines it as civil-military integration. This understanding implicitly or explicitly limits the Comprehensive Approach to crisis management. It is similar in some respects to the definitions of a Comprehensive Approach to Crisis Management used by NATO (although for NATO, as a military alliance, the focus on the Comprehensive Approach is on cooperation with external civilian actors whereas for the EU a Comprehensive Approach to crisis management is firstly internal – concerned with bringing together the military and civilian components of the Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP). A Comprehensive Approach to Crisis Management is already part of EU policy, as set out in the Council conclusions of December 2008.

A comprehensive approach to what…

The Comprehensive Approach discussion is further confused by disagreement over the object of the comprehensive approach. Within a broader definition, the focus of the Comprehensive Approach is external – it as can be described as follows: The comprehensive approach OF the EU TOWARDS a particular country or region.

This paper uses the short-hand “an EU Comprehensive Approach” for the above definition. In narrower definitions, the Comprehensive Approach remains internal, (e.g. the Comprehensive Approach to crisis management, mentioned above, or the comprehensive approach to crisis response, to conflict prevention etc.).

Beyond Crisis Response

Limiting the EU’s Comprehensive Approach to crisis response would also render it too narrow to be useful. Responding to crises is one small part of the EU’s external action and is also an area that will always prove difficult for the EU, given the complexity of its decision-making procedures. A Comprehensive Approach that enables the EU to be more effective at preventive action would play to its advantages.

In addition, there is a risk that the process of developing an EU Comprehensive Approach is hijacked by a separate debate about the role of the EEAS in crisis response. It would be useful to disentangle these two issues. The involvement of the EEAS in crisis response, including response to humanitarian disasters, and in particular the attempts by the EEAS to coordinate all EU response to crises, again including humanitarian assistance, is controversial. Rightly or wrongly, there are suspicions that a new communication on the Comprehensive Approach is an attempt to consolidate the crisis response role of the EEAS.

The following article is an abridged version of a background document which the EPLO office prepared in advance of that meeting.

In order to meet which objectives?

The objectives of EU external action are set out in the Lisbon Treaty and include the following:

- ‘promote peace, its values and the well-being of its peoples’ (Article 3.1)
- ‘preserve peace, prevent conflicts and strengthen international security’ (Article 21.2(c)).

The purpose of an EU Comprehensive Approach is to enable the EU to better meet these objectives.

2. Depth of the EU Comprehensive Approach

Integration, coordination, cooperation, communication

There are different understandings of the depth of a comprehensive approach. EPLO has previously drawn a distinction between integration and coordination. To this could be added other relationships between actors in conflict-affected countries:

- Integration: All relevant institutions are brought together to develop common objectives and strategies and then work jointly towards meeting them.
- Coordination: Different institutions develop their own objectives and work towards meeting them but coordinate, that is, share information (usually at coordination meetings) about what they are separately doing.
- Co-operation: Different actors (not necessarily all part of the EU) work together but are not part of the same institutional structures and do not (necessarily) share overall objectives and strategies.
- Communication: Different actors provide information about what they are each doing.

3. EU policies and actors to be part of an EU Comprehensive Approach

Ideally the comprehensive approach would cover all EU external
The EU and the Comprehensive Approach (Continued)

Policy areas (e.g. taking a truly Comprehensive Approach to country X in EU external action implies that all policies with an external dimension should be included in it). This is highly unrealistic given the battle to ensure that some policies remain outside the Comprehensive Approach. Certain policies remain “untouchable”. For instance, despite the provisions of the Lisbon Treaty, trade tends to remain a separate policy area.

An EU Comprehensive Approach could include the integration of EU external policies and coordination with other EU policies which have an external dimension or implications for EU external action. Thus, integration of the Common Security and Defence Policy (CFSP), development, humanitarian assistance and coordination with trade, fisheries; justice, freedom and security, etc.

Partially external actors: The Member States
The inclusion of the EU Member States in an EU Comprehensive Approach has various dimensions:

- EU Member States as decision-makers in EU policy have to be part of a Comprehensive Approach (in the sense of being part of its application by the EU).
- EU Member States as external actors with whom the EU needs to coordinate or co-operate.

The situation is fluid, however. Member States can choose the extent to which they continue to operate bilaterally in third countries compared to working through the EU system. This includes decisions on the amount of development assistance that they pool; whether or not they use the new option of joint programming of development assistance as set out in the 2011 joint EC and EEAS communication on ‘Global Europe’; whether they develop pooling and sharing options under CSDP; the number of common positions they take towards third countries on the diplomatic side; the extent to which they act as a block in international fora and so on.

Wholly external actors: third countries, civil society, international organisations
The argument has been made – many times – that the EU should focus less on questions of internal “coherence” and more on building up its relationships with external actors. In particular, with third-country governments, be they “partner” or “host country” governments or powerful states also active in countries and regions where the EU is active (some of which are now grouped as “strategic partners”). In addition, the EU has committed to working with civil society in many regions and has complex working – and funding – relationships with multilateral organisations such as UN agencies and the World Bank.

There might be co-operation or coordination between the EU and the external actors but the latter cannot be part of an EU comprehensive approach given that they are independent, external actors.

4. Tools for application of a Comprehensive Approach by the EU
The EU has developed new tools for the application of a Comprehensive Approach, notably the regional strategies and programming guidelines, where country strategy papers are now one of three options.

If a Comprehensive Approach communication is agreed it will need to be accompanied by or followed by instructions and guidance on the processes for its application.

In practice, an EU Comprehensive Approach would look something like the following:

- Joint – or at least shared – analysis across the EU institutions
- Joint programming and/or planning to develop common strategies and programmes setting out shared objectives and priorities
- Division of responsibilities
- Actions: each EU institutions plays its own separate role but within the overall agreed strategy.

5. A Comprehensive Approach for the EU: dilemmas and discussion points

Opposition to the Comprehensive Approach
Opposition to the current development of the Comprehensive Approach seems to derive in part from the fear of loss of power or subversion of principles. The following can be gleaned from the public discussions:

CSDP: Certain EU Member States are concerned that an EU Comprehensive Approach broadly defined will reduce the prominence of the CSDP by integrating it as one tool within an overall EU strategy. In addition, their fear is that this will limit development of the CSDP and in particular that it will limit the development and use of the military component of the CSDP.

Humanitarian assistance: The EC’s humanitarian assistance department (ECHO) and humanitarian NGOs are concerned that an EU Comprehensive Approach will put at risk the principles of independence and impartiality that are at the heart of humanitarian work. In addition, there may be a fear that an EU Comprehensive Approach will consolidate the trend towards coordination of EU response to crises – including humanitarian crises – by the EEAS. Wider concerns about the EEAS’ involvement in EU humanitarian assistance may come into play.

Development assistance: Certain actors in development are concerned that an EU Comprehensive Approach may lead to the “politicisation” of development assistance. (NB/ it is assumed that this means the use of development assistance to meet political goals which conflict with the stated goals of development assistance.)

Is it really worth developing a new policy on the EU Comprehensive Approach?
Given the opposition described above, one could question the value of developing an EU Comprehensive Approach. In addition, it could be argued that without institutional integration, an EU Comprehensive Approach will not be possible in practice.

The institutional set up following the Lisbon Treaty missed many opportunities to create a more integrated approach by the EU, due to resistance by parts of the EC, the Member States and others. It could be argued that a Comprehensive Approach is not possible in a situation of institutional fragmentation. For example, the EU’s response to conflict is currently divided across at least five different institutions and structures, leading to duplication and time wasted in coordination. Will a new policy actually be able to change this if there is a lack of institutional integration?

The development of a communication on an EU Comprehensive Approach and its application will simply lead to a continuation of discussions on the need for “coherence” without any actual change. The argument could also be made that the Comprehensive Approach is something that you do, not something that you talk about. Finally, there is a risk that what results is simply more coordination (i.e. more meetings for different parts of the EU to explain what they are separately doing).

Valid concerns have also been raised that an EU Comprehensive Approach may lead to a loss of some of the more effective and principled parts of EU external action.

On the other hand, the argument can be made that the communication on an EU Comprehensive Approach (and the upcoming review of the EEAS) are opportunities to rectify problems created by or not addressed by decisions on the implementation of the Lisbon Treaty. The EU and Peacebuilding: From European Peace Project to Global Actor

The EU and Peacebuilding: From European Peace Project to Global Actor is an 18-month project funded by the European Commission (Europe for Citizens Programme). Its aim is to engage a broad range of actors, including European citizens, European civil society organisations, academic institutions, research centres and think tanks, as well as national and EU-level decision-makers in a dialogue on the EU’s role in conflict prevention and peacebuilding and its history as a peace project.
